Shaping of the renal parenchyma in the fetal rat kidney in utero. We studied the growth of the renal parenchyma in fetal Wistar rats, using paired kidney explant cultures for culture periods of 24, 48 and 72 hours. In the first part of the study we examined whether the parenchyma, but not the corticomedullary boundary changes during culture. At 48 and 72 hours we measured the volume of the parenchyma in the longitudinal, transverse and ascending/descending (supra and infradiaphragmatic) sections of the parenchyma, as well as the volume of the corticomedullary boundary. At 48 hours there was a volume increase of 19% for the parenchyma, and 21% for the corticomedullary boundary. At 72 hours the parenchyma had increased 22% and the corticomedullary boundary 14%. In the second part of the study we examined whether the volume of the different compartments of the parenchyma increase proportionally or non-proportionally and how they scale with time in utero. The results indicate that, although the parenchyma increased in size uniformly with time, the corticomedullary boundary increased slightly only at 72 hours. The re-entry home visit: a new method to improve return to home after hospitalization. A new method to contact patients at home after hospitalization has been developed for three community hospitals in the Midwest. Patients have the option of being re-contacted by home health agency nurse home visitation, or by community outreach nursing. This study reports one year's experience with the re-entry home visit, which was associated with a 50% hospital re-admission rate, 43% in-hospital mortality rate and a 14.5% home re-admission rate. In recent years, short-range wireless communication technologies, such as Bluetooth and Wi-Fi, have found widespread use in our daily lives. Examples of other technologies include long-range wireless communication technologies that use the cellular network, such as General Packet Radio Service (GPRS) and Evolution Data Only (E-DOGF), or data over Internet Protocol (IP) technologies, such as Wireless Local Area Network (WLAN) technologies (e.g., 802.11) and Worldwide Interoperability for Microwave Access (WiMax) technologies. The above technologies are known to have limits and challenges in certain
