Sunday, March 5, 2011 A Screenplay is like a novel. It is the base unit of play. In a screenplay, we write a story in the most distilled form of the language of art and life, in which we can say everything we can in a few hundred or thousand words. In that form, we get to say some things that other forms allow us only to hint at. When I say the language of art and life I mean what I am given to believe is the language of the God of Love, the God of Light, the God of Life, those are the names I have given the source of what I understand as the Great Unity. All that the language of art and life affords us is an offering to that source. The Script (Movie). It is not a visual artwork, not a performing art, it is not even an art of action or a showing of its effect, it is a medium of creation for voices from the divine. It is based upon the rhythm of the human heart. It is a musical form expressing the love of the Heart of God. An unknown spiritual force in the form of a human being in whom we ourselves are identified and within whose identification we share, has given us this language. We do not pretend to understand it, we do not pretend to be able to make anything of it, we do not pretend to be able to use it for our own purposes, we are satisfied with letting it speak to us by being open to it. Some readers and listeners fall prey to the presumption that the writers of movies were given some special ability by Nature to bring the source of the language of art and life into the form of their art. As a movie writer and screenwriter, I am convinced that our work is an offering to the source of the language of art and life, and so in the purity of our intention we are open to that source, and in that sense, we are open to the God of Love, Light, and Life, who created all our senses so that we might be conscious and aware of His presence and His Love in each moment. That is an offering that is accepted by all who listen and read. All it says is that on the next page, Mr. or Ms. Producer, check out the list of ways we think they can "voice character" more efficiently. Examples of Character Voices We are not using these examples as a guideline. We are using these examples as proof of our point that the heart of the actor

We see a lot of fake resources on the Internet. Its easy to find REAL information. Just use your wits, a little common sense, some research, and you'll find out the truth about a lot of things. Google Maps Today, Google Maps was released to mobile phones. Its a great way to search for a destination on your phone. You can also use this to search for a specific address, which is a lot easier. If youve tried searching for an address on Google Maps with out success, try searching for it using Google Maps. The only problem I encountered while searching for an address is the screen size of Google Maps. I was unable to search for addresses in longer distances, so use this new service with some common sense. Walking Walking is a great way to get exercise. Just get out there and walk for 30 minutes a day. Its a lot of fun and can be done almost anywhere. The secret to walking is to keep your heart rate up. I usually listen to music and get in the mood to walk. VOIP Telephone Yes, we finally have the VOIP telephone. This allows you to make calls on your cell phone for free. For example, if you have a "pay as you go" cell phone, use it to make calls. The downside to it is that you can't really use it like a normal telephone. The only phone service that I tried was using a CDMA phone. Unfortunately, I'm on the regular phone and its not free. I was also unable to get a dial tone. Text Messages Today, you can send text messages to other people for free. It was a lot of fun to send text messages in the past when you didn't have to pay for them. You just paid a fixed rate per minute which was expensive. Voice Mail Voice mail is becoming popular. Today, if you own a home phone you can have your own voice mailbox on your cell phone. The only problem with this is your having to listen to your mail. Paging Systems Paging systems are becoming popular. Basically, if someone says you can contact them 24 hours a day, 7 days a week via a paging system, you can call them at any time. However, you can't actually contact them without knowing their pager number, and that can be hard to find. Chat Rooms Chat rooms are becoming popular. There are even chat rooms for playing video games, such as MMORPGs. The main downside is 6d1f23a050
